JD started out as a multi-sport high school star in Northern California. Yet for a guy who'd go on to slug his way to World Series MVP, he never really got the recruiting attention his talents deserved. JD had to make it big the hard way. That's why he's made it his mission to help young athletes use their abilities to open doors and get further in life.

He says, "I'm really excited about what our team brings to high school students that no one else can. Helping kids achieve a college scholarship isn't just about sports, it's also about higher education."
